The English Rose Kitchen

Between the 1950s and 60s, the English Rose and Paul Metalcraft brands were the last word in fitted kitchens. The unique styling, top grade materials and fine British engineering guaranteed that these exclusive units were built to last.

Fifty years on, Source of Bath is proud to be the country's leading firm restoring these fine kitchens to their former glory. Our unique methods include a total strip down to the bare metal, re-coating and a comprehensive service. We even manufacture and replace all worn components. The result is a kitchen that looks and feels like new.

The customer can choose any possible colour for the frontage and interior of the units, making these the most flexible kitchens when it comes to colour schemes and layout design.

We also offer a gleaming polished metal finish which transforms these already classic designs into something out of this world!

Mixer and pillar taps, soap dishes and various fittings of the period are also available.

We are always happy to advise and discuss kitchen plans of any size. Contact us for a quote...

"We were unsure if a 50's kitchen would suit our listed, turn of the century cottage but with guidance from Source we decided it was the perfect choice for our home.

Rod and Tom's advice on colour options, layout, worktops and suitable appliances was excellent! The finished kitchen is a joy to work in and a real talking point for our guests.

For great service and a truly individual kitchen... Source it!"

Simon, Glastonbury

"We wanted a family kitchen which our children could grow up with and remember well into their adult years. After years of not really knowing what to do with our old kitchen, we visited lots of showrooms and got disheartened with what was on offer. They all looked the same. Once we had discovered that English Rose units existed, we were over the moon to discover that Source Antiques actually got them to a standard that looked as good as new.

Everyone who has seen the kitchen has loved it"

Mark and Cass, Sheffield

The
English Rose
KITCHEN

The "English Rose" kitchen was the first "styled" kitchen to be produced, providing the natural progressive development of equipment for the most important room in the house.

"English Rose" sink units and floor cabinets are constructed from 'Pyluminised' aluminium, mounted on a 3" stainless steel base, with highly polished stainless steel sinks, drainers and work tops - materials specially chosen for their resistance to the humid conditions in the kitchen. They are available in most RAL colours. As an alternative to stainless steel they can be supplied with colourful "Softglow" Formica work tops.

Source also supplies a fine range of period lighting...

Source Antiques are delighted to be able to supply a facsimile of the original 1953 "English Rose" catalogue for £10 (plus P & P). Please contact us for further details.
